

Administrative Law

Regulations and other federal agency actions can have significant consequences for businesses, universities, nonprofit entities, and individuals. We litigate challenges to agency actions under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) and represent clients in agency proceedings. We work with trade associations, businesses across industries, and other adversely affected parties to challenge agency actions that transgress statutory or constitutional limits. We also represent parties that support agency actions, including decisions to deregulate, that are challenged by others.

PRACTICE AT A GLANCE

- Our team includes lawyers who have served in senior positions at a broad range of federal agencies—including the US Department of Justice, the agency tasked with defending APA challenges in court. We also have substantial experience working with specific regulated industries.
- We regularly advise clients at every stage of the administrative process—from developing initial legal strategy and drafting comments during the rulemaking process to litigating in federal district or appellate courts across the country. And our team is particularly well equipped to address novel and complex statutory and constitutional issues that arise during administrative law proceedings or resulting litigation.
- Significant agency actions are almost always challenged in court, either by the industry or party being regulated or by third parties objecting to agency deregulatory efforts or urging more stringent regulation. Parties that support agency actions challenged by others often intervene in the litigation to help defend the action at issue. Before litigation begins, we ensure that parties' interests are represented before the agency in question.
