

Private Company Corporate Governance: Closing the Gap with Public Companies

In 2003, in the wake of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, we raised the guestion of whether the once broad demarcation between public and private companies would be narrowing in the corporate governance arena. Looking at this issue in 2005, it is clear that market forces and recent case law have significantly impacted private companies by imposing public company-like corporate governance standards created or enhanced by the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.

These governance issues are relevant to companies that do not have immediate plans to go public as well as alternative corporate forms like limited liability companies (LLCs). LLCs can be subject to corporate governance standards because either the LLC operating agreement explicitly adopts the fiduciary duties imposed under a particular state corporation law (usually Delaware) or because emerging case law has begun to impose on LLCs certain corporationbased governance standards such as the fiduciary standards for members, managers and officers of LLCs.

Market Forces

The corporate governance provisions of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act and the related regulations adopted by the SEC and stock markets apply only to public companies. However, the marketplace can be a more powerful regulator than a statute. There are signs that market forces have begun to impose on private companies some of the new or enhanced corporate governance requirements and/or principles of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.

The new corporate governance regime is based upon, among other things, the following themes:

- Board of Directors Independence from Management
- Audit Committee Independence and Increased Authority
- Senior Management Accountability

These themes are translated into the following specific requirements under the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, its implementing regulations and related stock market listing requirements:

- Requirement that the majority of directors be independent
- Requirement that director nominations and compensation decisions be overseen by independent directors

wilmerhale.com

Baltimore

Beijing

Berlin

Boston

Brussels

London

Munich

New York

Northern Virginia

Oxford

Palo Alto

Waltham

Washington

- Requirement that Audit Committees be composed of directors who meet a heightened test of independence
- Empowerment of Audit Committees to hire outside counsel and other advisers
- Requirement that Audit Committees establish a process to hear complaints and reports regarding accounting and auditing concerns

While pre-IPO companies will begin complying with the Sarbanes-Oxley Act as part of the going public process, market forces are requiring non-IPO private companies of material size and/or significant equity interests to adopt at least some of the corporate governance reforms the Act has generated.

- Acquisition Exit Strategy: If a private company's strategic plan contemplates the possibility of ultimately being acquired by a public company, the company will likely want to adopt some of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act—inspired improvements relating to the maintenance, effective internal controls and procedures, and compliance programs. Taking these steps should facilitate an acquirer's due diligence process and help facilitate integration into the public company's Sarbanes-Oxley compliance programs.
- Private Equity Market: Private equity and other institutional investors have begun to incorporate the Sarbanes-Oxley Act standards as components of their investment guidelines. These key requirements are for (i) Board of Directors independence; (ii) Audit Committee independence, authority and

- competence; (iii) senior management accountability; and/or (iv) disclosure of related party transactions.
- D&O Insurance: The Sarbanes-Oxley Act has had a direct impact on the underwriting process for D&O insurance. Underwriters are seeking greater disclosure of financial transactions, reviewing Board of Director and Audit Committee minutes and attendance reports, and conducting due diligence on the independence of Audit Committee members.
- Nonprofits: Under pressure from the marketplace of best practices, nonprofits have begun to adopt the Sarbanes-Oxley Act-produced corporate governance practices. For example, at colleges and universities, "[h]igh on administrators' radar screens is the 2002 Sarbanes-Oxley law...As nonprofits, the schools are not bound by the law, but most opted to follow its spirit by instituting stricter accounting oversight and accountability practices."² A recent news report indicated that as a direct result of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, schools have adopted new measures such as having the audit committee report directly to the board of directors, enhanced accounting internal controls, and board training on the requirements of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.

These market forces are not just responding to the best practices emanating from the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, but also to recent case law. Recent decisions are beginning to lay the foundation under case law to elevate private company corporate governance standards to public company levels.

I. A pre-IPO company becomes an "issuer" under the Sarbanes-Oxley Act when it files a registration statement.

^{2.} AU Scandal Atypical in the Post-Enron Era, College Presidents Say, Washington Post A18 (October 9, 2005).

Case Law: Private Company Director and Officer Liability

In May 2003, a federal judge in the influential Southern District of New York issued an opinion in John S. Pereira (Trustee of Trace International Holdings, Inc.) v. Cogan et. al.,3 that extended to a private company traditional public company standards for corporate governance. While the reach of this decision is still evolving (the company at issue was a holding company with a material position in a public company and the trial judge's decision was reversed on procedural grounds by the Second Circuit⁴), this case may prove to be a significant precedent regarding the merging of public company and private company corporate governance standards.

In Pereira, the judge held several officers and directors liable for damages for breaches of fiduciary duties in their roles at an insolvent private holding company and for their failure of oversight concerning a number of self-dealing transactions by the company's chief executive officer. For example, the following court findings echo the corporate governance themes of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act:

• Failure of Compensation Committee to Be Independent: The court faulted the Compensation Committee (i) for not being composed of completely independent directors and (ii) for not hiring outside consultants to establish the CEO's compensation, which the court found to be excessive. The court noted that all but one of the Compensation Committee members was an employee and even the non-employee was a long time business associate and personal friend of the CEO. The court's ruling was not based upon any requirement in the Delaware General Corporation Law that requires that a private company have a certain number of independent directors, a Compensation Committee or a certain number of independent directors on the Compensation Committee.

• Senior Management Accountability:
The court imposed liability on senior management based in part on its conclusion that certain officers should have known about unauthorized loans to insiders and/or reported them to the Board of Directors. In addition, the court held that the company's general counsel failed in his obligation to discuss with the Board of Directors its duty (i) to establish a compliance and monitoring program or an Audit Committee; (ii) to supervise and evaluate the CEO; and (iii) to inform themselves about insider transactions with the CEO.

Board of Directors Independence and Accountability: Liability for certain members of the Board of Directors was established by imputing knowledge to the directors of information found in the company's audited financial statements. The court held that the Board of Directors could not shield itself from liability by relying on financial information provided by officers when that information was inconsistent with information in the company's audited financial statements. In addition, the court found that the Board of Directors breached its fiduciary duties by failing adequately to play a "watchdog" role an Audit Committee is expected to play. In particular, the court complained that the Board of Directors had failed to establish (i) reporting and monitoring systems; (ii) codes of conduct; and (iii) compliance policies.

^{3. 2003} WL 21039976 (No. 00 Civ. 619 (RWS), S.D.N.Y.) (May 8, 2003) (applying Delaware law).

^{4.} Vacated and remanded subnom. Pereira v. Farce, 413 F.3d 330 (2nd Cir. June 30, 2005) (No. 03-5035 CC)), 03-5055 (CON)) (holding that defendant officers had a Seventh Amendment jury trial right to hear breach of duty of claims).

Since the district court's May 2003 decision, a subsequent court and commentary have applied components of the Pereira corporate governance holdings to private companies.⁵

This letter is for general informational purposes only and does not represent our legal advice as to any particular set of facts, nor does this letter represent any undertaking to keep recipients advised as to all relevant legal developments.

Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP is a Delaware limited liability partnership. Our UK offices are operated under a separate Delaware limited liability partnership.

© 2005 Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP

CORPORATE AND SECURITIES LAW UPDATE

If you have any questions or need additional information, please contact either of the following:

Glynn D. Key

202 663 6091 glynn.key@wilmerhale.com

Jonathan Wolfman

617 526 6833

jonathan.wolfman@wilmerhale.com

^{5.} Growe v. Bedard (No. Civ. 03-198-B-S) 2004 WL 2677216 (D.Me.) (Nov. 23,2004) (magistrate order denying motion to strike and recommended decision in motion per summary judgment) (citing Pereira for holding characterizing abdication of directorial duty as evidence of disloyalty); American Law Reports 3d., Liability of Corporate Directors for Negligence in Permitting Mismanagement or Defalcations by Officers or Employees (2005) (citing Pereira for "one means by which corporate director may [breach] his duty of care under Delaware law is by failure to monitor."); Venture Capital and Small Business Financing, Robert Hoyt Chapter 14 Due Diligence and Civil Liability (August 2005) 2A Venture Cap & Bus. Fin §14:65.50 (citing Pereira for holding that a general counsel who was not a director had breached his fiduciary duties of due care, loyalty and good faith for failure to advise board concerning its monitoring duties stating that "the role of General Counsel is to advise the board as to its statutory obligations and provide guidance and recommend measures necessary to meet those obligations."); Breach of Fiduciary Duty as Securities Fraud: SEC v. Chanceller Corp., 10 Fordham J. Corp. & Fin. L. 439 (2005) (citing Pereira for the standards for duty of care).