

Trump Administration's Priorities on Corporate Wrongdoings: What You Need to Know

AUGUST 8, 2017

Since the issuance of the Yates Memo in late 2015, the US Department of Justice has pursued a policy of seeking accountability from individuals who perpetrate corporate wrongdoing. It requires that any company under investigation must deliver all proof of wrongdoing by its employees to receive credit for cooperation. The DOJ policy thus added a heavy burden to any corporation that intends to use an internal investigation as support for leniency or a settlement.

With the avowedly business-friendly Trump administration comes uncertainty over how priorities will change under the new attorney general and reconstituted DOJ staff. In this two-hour live webcast, a panel of thought leaders brought together by The Knowledge Group, including WilmerHale Counsel Justin Goodyear, will discuss the current state of Yates Memo enforcement as it affects inside counsel and internal compliance officers, and further how the preferences of the current administration may translate into refocusing or revision of DOJ policy.

Key topics include:

- Yates Memo Overview
- Individual Accountability
- Internal Investigations
- Disclosure Requirements
- Cooperation Credit
- Criminal/Civil Liability
- Enforcement Trends

READ MORE ABOUT THE EVENT

---

Related Solutions

You May Be Interested In

AIPLA Claim Construction Webinar

APRIL 25, 2024

SPEAKING ENGAGEMENT

PLI's Corporate Governance – A Master Class 2024

APRIL 25, 2024

SPEAKING ENGAGEMENT

FIA Law & Compliance Division Conference 2024

APRIL 24–26, 2024

SPEAKING ENGAGEMENT

VIEW ALL EVENTS