

AIG Multinational Risk Seminar: The Globalization of Liability-Managing Multinational Solutions

2008-04-02

For global companies, the international regulatory landscape is increasingly complex, navigating litigation in emerging markets is difficult and executive liability risks are growing worldwide. With the ever-present threat of protracted litigation, cost to a company's reputation could be compounded by legal -- and financial -- liabilities. Many countries and jurisdictions require local operations and subsidiaries to carry locally-admitted liability coverage. Even where it's not required, it often makes good risk management sense. Without locally-admitted insurance in place, multinationals with foreign operations may be vulnerable to multimillion dollar losses that their global policies won't adequately cover.

WilmerHale partner Thomas White was a featured speaker at this program, presented by AIG.
