

Harvard Law School: A Celebration of Public Interest

MARCH 13-15, 2008

Harvard Law School will celebrate the accomplishments of their graduates and students who are involved with the nonprofit sector, the government sector, public international practice, the private bar, academia and the judiciary at this 3-day Celebration of Public Interest event. Attendees will have the opportunity to connect with classmates and other lawyers as well as have the opportunity to inspire students and admitted students at this event, by sharing their experiences in public service, either through full-time public service practice, pro bono work in the private sector, or moving back and forth between the sectors.

WilmerHale partner Mark Fleming will be a panelist at the event, and will speak about the firm's Guantanamo litigation as part of a session called "The Quest for International Justice" on March 14.
