

Human Rights First Conference: Prosecuting Terrorism Cases

NOVEMBER 17-18, 2008

This Human Rights First Conference brought together a number of former federal prosecutors and other leaders for a discussion about terrorism cases in the federal courts and whether the federal courts have the capacity to try these cases.

WilmerHale counsel Robin L. Baker was a speaker at this event, participating in roundtable discussions on the capability of the federal courts to try terrorism cases, current national security court and administrative detention proposals, and potential legislative activity on the horizon.
