

Practising Law Institute: Health Care IT 2015: Critical Issues

MAY 28, 2015

IT and Health Care are rapidly converging as a result of fast-paced innovation in health-focused information technology and new regulatory and operational requirements faced by health that are met by these innovations. This requires institutions, IT companies and the lawyers who advise them and investors to reevaluate and revise existing agreements, address intellectual property issues, and formulate new forms of agreements for new technology -- including in remote, retail, personalized and assisted living health care. Challenges posed by data security and cyber-attacks and privacy aspects of data sharing must be enhanced at the same time that data analytics and mobile and cloud computing are being used to improve patient outcomes, drug development and other aspects of the health care ecosystem. Cloud Computing, Mobile Computing and even Social Media. This conference brings together legal experts from key legal areas to provide practical guidance so that lawyers can create value in advising clients on in health care IT legal fields.
