
Three Things To Know About New California Labor Trafficking Law

AUGUST 8, 2016

In this article published by Law360, Chris Casamassima, Sonia Fleury and Kelsey McGregor detail recent changes to California's labor trafficking policy, and three key compliance steps that companies should be aware of.

California is the leading destination in the country for temporary foreign workers, and one of the nation's top four destination states for trafficking in persons. Temporary foreign workers are often recruited by foreign labor contractors, who communicate the job description to the foreign worker, and facilitate the legal and practical aspects of moving to the United States for a job.
