

Considerations When Hiring Executive Branch Employees

OCTOBER 26, 2016

An article by Christopher Babbitt, Thomas White, Blake Roberts and Adam Raviv, published by Law360, discusses legal considerations for companies looking to hire executive branch employees as the Obama Administration winds down.

As the Obama administration winds down, the number of administration officials leaving the government will increase dramatically. The traditional exodus that accompanies the end of a presidential administration creates opportunities for the private and nonprofit sectors to recruit talented individuals with unique experience. Without appropriate controls, however, this process can create legal and reputational risks for prospective employers and employees alike. Read the full article

Authors

Christopher E. Babbitt

PARTNER

Co-Chair, False Claims Act Practice

 christopher.babbitt@wilmerhale.com

 +1 202 663 6681

Thomas W. White

RETIRED PARTNER

 +1 202 663 6000