Trends in Automotive Technology: 2017 and the Road Ahead

DECEMBER 22, 2017

An article by David Cavanaugh, Yung-Hoon (Sam) Ha, Natalie Hanlon Leh, Mike Silhasek and Todd Zubler, contributed to Law360, looks back at 2017 to describe how the legal landscape for automotive technology has been developing, particularly with respect to autonomous vehicles, and discusses where automotive technology and legal issues may be heading in 2018 and beyond.

Excerpt: This has been a year in which automotive technology and the legal issues surrounding it have come increasingly to the forefront, both in legal circles and public perception. Given the many new entrants in the autonomous vehicle sector, and the tangible, visible progress toward viable driverless cars, automotive technology promises to be a focus of intellectual property disputes and regulatory attention in the coming years.
