Nina Garcia focuses her practice on intellectual property litigation. She counsels prominent technology companies involved in global patent disputes and assists clients with patent litigation in federal district courts and in Section 337 investigations before the United States International Trade Commission. These disputes involve a variety of technologies, including smartphones, semiconductors and pharmaceuticals.

Ms. Garcia is also committed to pro bono work. She represented terminally-ill patients in a successful intervention to a challenge of Vermont's law authorizing medical aid in dying. Ms. Garcia has also filed briefing regarding the dangers of solitary confinement on prisoners with mental disabilities in the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit on behalf of amici curiae.

While in law school, Ms. Garcia was a judicial extern for the Honorable Juan R. Torruella of the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, as well as for the Honorable Thomas J. Whelan of the United States District Court for the Southern District of California.

Prior to law school, Ms. Garcia was an intern for United States Senator Dianne Feinstein in Senator Feinstein's Los Angeles office.
