Stephanie Hartmann's practice focuses on international economic regulation and trade policy, including WTO dispute resolution and market access issues; antidumping and countervailing duty proceedings before the US Department of Commerce, International Trade Commission and federal courts; and sanctions, export control and customs matters.

Prior to joining the firm, Ms. Hartmann served as a law clerk for the Honorable Timothy C. Stanceu of the US Court of International Trade. She was previously a litigation associate at another Washington DC law firm, where she handled matters related to international trade and civil litigation.

While in law school, Ms. Hartmann interned at the US Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and the Office of the Chief Counsel for Import Administration at the Department of Commerce. Prior to pursuing her law degree, Ms. Hartmann was an analyst in the Office of International Affairs at US Customs and Border Protection and an intern at a customs and international trade services provider.
